

Yen-Ju Chu

• Current position:

- Attending Physician, Department of Emergency Medicine, National Taiwan University Hospital.

• Specialty:

- Pediatric neurology

• Education:

- MD, School of Medicine, National Taiwan University.

• Career and certification:

- Attending Physician, Department of Emergency Medicine, National Taiwan University Hospital.
- Fellow, Department of Pediatric Neurology, National Taiwan University Children's Hospital.
- Resident, Department of Pediatrics, National Taiwan University Children's Hospital.

- Reminder from Dr. Chu:

When a child first has convulsions, many parents will fall into anxiety, but the occurrence of convulsions is not exactly equal to epilepsy, and a careful assessment by a pediatric neurologist is needed to make the most accurate diagnosis. When suspected of having epilepsy, physicians often require parental assistance to provide a detailed description of the symptoms. Video recording on a smart phone can also be an important basis for clinicians to judge. Most people with epilepsy can get good control by regular medication. Many children with epilepsy can be cured if they are properly controlled. Therefore, the cooperation between parents and doctors to choose the appropriate treatment is necessary in order to give the child the greatest chance of cure and the greatest development potential.

Online Registration : Register

NTUHF